TOP TOURIST ATTRACTIONS IN THE WORLD

MACHU PICCHU - PERU

The ancient Inca city of Machu Picchu is arguably the most impressive ruined city in the world. Much of the attraction comes from its location, high in the jungle-clad mountains of Peru. Set on a high plateau with soaring green mountains, the setting is surreal. The sheer tenacity of the original builders to create this amazing place in what would have been impenetrable jungle, is, in itself, impressive.

FORBIDDEN CITY - CHINA

Borobudur dates from the 9th century and is one of the largest Buddhist temples in the world. It's a fascinating place to wander about. Over 500 Buddhas are spread around the site, some of which sit under ornate stupas.

BOOST AND IMPROVE YOUR IMMUNE SYSTEM

ALMONDS

When it comes to preventing and fighting off colds, vitamin E tends to take a backseat to vitamin C. However, this powerful antioxidant is key to a healthy immune system. It's a fat-soluble vitamin, which means it requires the presence of fat to be absorbed properly. Nuts, such as almonds, are packed with the vitamin and also have healthy fats. Adults only need about 15 mg of vitamin E each day. A half-cup serving of almonds, which is about 46 whole, shelled almonds, provides around 100 percent Trusted Source of the recommended daily amount.

KIWI

Like papayas, KIWIS are naturally full of a ton of essential nutrients, including folate, potassium, vitamin K, and vitamin C. Vitamin C boosts the white blood cells to fight infection, while kiwi's other nutrients keep the rest of your body functioning properly.

Indian Cuisine at the Top of the World By - Chef. Neena Joshi Associate Dean, FHMCT RUAS, Bangalore

Indian cuisine has evolved over centuries, it is geographically well defined and has variety of dishes based on distinct flavours of ingredients that play a culinary role as well as a medicinal role in creating a balanced diet for good health. Whatever one eats is believed to be the cause and cure of all ailments. Thus, food has been as much an art as a science in our culture which revolves around an enchanting culinary tradition. Though Indian cuisine has become popular in certain parts of the world, it is yet to be given a place at the top, worldwide. Some of this could be attributed to the fact that most culinary schools in India do not attach as much importance to Indian cuisine as they would to French and Italian cuisines.

Pan Asian cuisines have in the recent past taken centre stage globally but Indian cuisine is still lagging. This is very apparent in the quality of Indian cuisine served in the metro cities of the world. On an average, except for the high-end fine dining restaurants, Indian cuisine available to tourists in India and abroad leaves a lot to be desired. There is more to Indian cuisine and its repertoire of dishes than what tourists are served. It is time for culinary professionals and teachers in India to sit up, take notice and do something about it. The time has arrived to do justice in promoting quality Indian cuisine the way our ancestors meant it to be.

Open the shelves of any kitchen in India and you will see rows and rows of glorious ingredients, each one with a character of its own and a story to tell. Cinnamon vying for attention by the side of the vibrant chilly, saffron by the side of the mysterious asafoetida. As diverse as the people of India are in their culture, habits and occupation, the diversity in food is unmatched and no other country's cuisines come even close. It's no surprise then, that for any Indian who loves to cook, deciding the menu is a huge task with so much to choose from.

The Origins of Indian Cuisine goes back to Harappa and Mohenjo-Daro, two ancient civilisations in 2600 and 3000 BC. It is the oldest known civilization where the inhabitants were urban and not agrarian. From the Vedic age, food has played many roles in India's evolving culture through centuries of migration and colonial occupation. India has seen a phenomenal intermingling of cultures that has resulted in culinary and cultural influences. Indians bond over food and no interaction is complete without the topic of food being introduced. Indians are extremely generous with their food and the concept of eating alone in the company of others would be taboo, unlike our western counterparts.

India's climate is so varied, that one experiences hot tropical to the cooler alpine across the length and breadth of the country.

Nature has created a broad variety of ingredients and food has become a unifying factor with a social identity of its own.

Traditionally, there are various taboos and preferences associated with food which are strictly passed down from generation to generation in spite of globalisation and awareness. It is said that any national cuisine is a sum total of its regional cuisines and if one tries to create an Indian menu the list would never end. This makes the professional chef's job more challenging.

But the time has arrived for Indian chefs to be proud of their cuisine and let it have an identity of its own without demeaning it with western influences. Much is said about fusion cuisine which in my opinion is basically killing the flavours and confusing the consumer. Having said that, India is unique in that, it has more than 35 regional cuisines and five fusion cuisines where Indian culinary influences play a dominating role. Purity in the used/selected ingredients is the essence of Indian cuisine. No self-respecting Indian chef, domestic or professional will ever use store bought spice powders, every ingredient is treated with respect due to the role it plays in providing taste, flavours, digestive benefits and nutrients. There are more than a hundred pre-mixed 'Masala Powders' and 'Freshly Ground Masala Pastes' that is sacred to every household.

What makes Indian cuisine so special? Overlapping flavours are never used in Indian recipes and this ensures a unique taste that gets anyone who tries it for the first time hooked for life. Indian recipes usually include a long list of ingredients but what is incredible is that the flavour of each ingredient stands out without being overpowering. Allow me to take examples of some multi ingredient Indian dishes.

Each of the ingredients in both the dishes have a strong, special flavour and taste of its own. There are bursts of flavours in the mouth which are unique and leaving even one of them out will alter the taste of the dish completely. There is a misconceived notion that Indian cuisine is spicy or worse still reduced to one word 'Curry'. Spice can be controlled but every dish has ingredients whose contribution to the flavour and taste of the dish cannot be defined.

Mutton Pepper Fry is traditionally made by combining pieces of mutton with onions, garlic, curry leaves, green chillies, coriander powder, cumin powder, pepper corns, turmeric, red chillies and fennel.

Chana Masala is traditionally based with green chillies, onion, garlic, coriander leaves, coriander powder, cumin seeds, cardamom, cinnamon, peppercorns, cloves, turmeric, red chillies, dried mango powder tomatoes and cooked
